Managed Realignment : A Viable Long-Term Coastal Management Strategy? Luciana S. Esteves, 2014-07-14
Managed realignment has been a preferred coastal management strategy in England in the 21st century and has also been increasingly implemented elsewhere Climate change and environmental and financial concerns have led to a shift from the traditional hold the line approach of coastal protection towards more flexible soft engineering options Managed realignment is a relatively new soft engineering alternative aiming to provide sustainable flood risk management with added environmental and socio economic benefits by creating space for coastal habitats to develop more dynamically The natural adaptive capacity of coastal habitats and the ecosystem services they provide underpin the sustainability of managed realignment However many definitions of managed realignment exist and the understanding of what the term actually represents in practice has evolved through time and varies regionally This book clarifies the definitions and terminology used in the literature and proposes that managed realignment is used as a general term that encompasses the many different methods of implementation worldwide including removal breach and realignment of defences controlled tidal restoration which includes regulated tidal exchange and controlled reduced tide and managed retreat These methods of implementation are explained and illustrated with examples from around the world In addition to a general overview of emerging policies and current practices specific chapters discuss approaches adopted in different locations including the Netherlands the UK and Maui USA The UK experience is presented from the perspectives of three sectors the National Trust a charity organisation that owns 10% of the coastline of England and Wales the Environment Agency the organisation responsible for implementing government policy concerning flood and erosion risk and a private consultant involved in the planning design and delivery of managed realignment projects Taking a wider perspective to consider the range of implementation methods the viability of managed realignment as a long term coastal management strategy is discussed Recent national and regional strategies worldwide give managed realignment an increasing role in climate change and flood risk management Gaining stakeholders and public support is fundamental for the success of emerging coastal management strategies However public perception and stakeholders engagement are often cited as a factor limiting the wider uptake of managed realignment Results from a recent survey are used to benchmark the current thinking about the potential the performance and the limitations of managed realignment in the UK and elsewhere Current opinions about managed realignment are often not clearly defined partly due to many projects being relatively recent There is a general perception of great potential to provide sustainable flood risk management with added environmental benefits However the views of stakeholders are considerably more negative and notably contrast with the views of practitioners and researchers The only clear and dominant agreement across all groups of respondents is that better understanding about the long term evolution of sites is needed

Managing Innovative Projects and Programs H. James Harrington, Sid Ahmed Benraouane, 2022-07-15 It has been estimated that over 75% of the innovative projects that begin through the Innovation Management System IMS are either failures or they failed to produce the desired results The biggest wastes most medium to large size organizations face are the waste of money time reputation opportunity and income that these failures are costing them Following this book's recommendations could reduce this failure cost by as much as 70% The purpose of this book is to provide a step by step procedure on how to process a medium or large size project program or product using an already established IMS that considers the guidance given in ISO 56002 2019 Innovation Management Systems Standard Often the most complicated complex difficult and challenging system used in an organization is the IMS At the same time it usually is the most important system because it is the one that generates most of the value adding products for the organization and it involves most of the key functions within the organization The opportunity for failure in time and the impact on the organization is critical and often means the difference between success and bankruptcy Throughout this book the authors detail the high impact inputs and activities that are required to process individual projects programs products through the innovation cycle Although this book was prepared to address how medium to large projects programs and products proceed through the cycle it also provides the framework that can be used for small organizations and simple innovation activities Basically the major difference between large and small impact innovation projects is that the small projects can accept more risks require less formal documentation use simpler communication systems and require fewer resources It s important to remember that the authors are addressing an existing IMS rather than trying to create an entirely new one Currently this is the only book geared for professionals responsible for managing innovative projects and programs using ISO 56002 2019 Innovation Management Innovation Management System Guidance to provide a comprehensive management strategy and step by step plan and ISO 56004 Innovation Management Assessment Guidance It provides a comprehensive analysis of what is required from the time an opportunity is recognized to the time the customer is using the innovative product The book also introduces a new Process modeling cloud service that allows you to drill down 5 levels from the system level to the job description level and includes free access to many of the book s best practice Process models
