

Tuberculosis - TB

Rev. October 2017

Definition

TB is an infectious disease caused by TB germs. TB usually attacks the lungs and can affect any part of the body. TB has been around for centuries.

Transmission

TB is spread from person to person through the air. TB is spread when someone sick with TB in the lungs, coughs or sneezes. It is not highly contagious. Close, prolonged or regular contact with someone who is sick with TB disease is needed to spread this disease.

Signs and Symptoms

TB infection:

Most people who breathe in TB germs are able to stop them from growing. Their immune system traps the TB germs and keeps them inactive. This is called TB infection.

People with TB infection:

- Cannot spread TB germs to others
- Do not feel sick or have TB symptoms
- Have a positive skin test (people with weak immune systems may have a negative skin test even though they are infected with TB - speak with your doctor or nurse)
- May develop active TB disease later in life

TB disease:

TB germs become active when the body's immune system cannot stop the germs from growing. The active TB germs begin to grow and cause damage to the body. This is called TB disease. TB disease of the lungs and throat can be spread to others.

People with TB disease can feel sick with:

- Fever / chills / night sweats
- Coughing (more than 3 weeks)
- Tiredness
- Loss of appetite / unexplained weight loss

If the TB disease is in another part of the body, the symptoms will depend on where the TB is growing, for example swollen lymph node or joint pain.

Tests

Screening for TB infection is done by a skin test. A positive skin test means a person has the TB germ in their body. A physical examination, chest x-ray and sputum (mucous coughed up from the lungs) are done to check for TB disease.

Treatment

People with TB infection may benefit from medicine to prevent TB disease. The medicine will keep the germ inactive and will stop the bacteria from growing in your body.

People with TB disease must take medicine to cure the disease. The doctor will decide how long the person needs to take the medicine. All TB medicine is free.

TB is preventable, treatable and curable.
