

son, who wrote a treatise on The Science of Being a Connoisseur. Later, when the cult of the picturesque was at its height, we find the words of the connoisseur, the Rev. William Gilpin, quarrelling with George Hill, because it is not so good a landscape as might have been expected — "we have nowhere a complete formed distance." The habit of looking for pictures in the landscape, and of selecting and composing the view according to rules, is quite new, added to the topographical habit, and becomes strong enough to detain the poets, as well as to the amateurs of painting.

What the rules were, and how they came to be, is the matter of the next chapter.

THE CULT OF THE PICTURESQUE

DRYDEN published his translation of Du Fresnoy's De Arte Graphica in 1703. William Mason's appeared in 1724, when the cult of the picturesque was at its height. "I mean [by picturesque] nothing more than such ideas as could be transformed into a picture," writes William Gilpin, "and I distinguish widely between them and poetical beauties." Dryden supplied a guide book for collectors, "to give reason to those who blindly valued." In the preface he says, "That Picture and that Poem which comes nearest to the resemblance of Nature is the best. But it follows not, that what pleases most in either kind is therefore good; but what ought to please . . . Rules were invented, that by them we might discern when Nature was imitated, and how nearly." But Nature, meaner Nature seen through the eyes and the time-pellowed varnish of old masters. "Composition should conform to the manner of the old masters, just as Epic should follow Homer, and Tragedy Sophocles." By the end of the seventeenth century the stage was already set.

The eighteenth century was the age of antiquarian research, and widely diffused classical scholarship. Ever since, there has been a nostalgia lingering among the English for the ancient splendours of Rome, and the romantic associations of the Campagna, its apertures and hills and walled towns and ruins. The Rev. Archibald Alison gives voice to the feeling (1790) in writing of "the emotion of sublime delight, which every man of common sensibility feels upon the first prospect of Rome . . . all that the labours of his youth or the studies of his maturer age have acquired with regard to the history of that great people, open at once before his imagination, and present him with a field of high and solemn imagery, which can never be exhausted." Visiting such places with Du Fresnoy in their hands, tourists would while away the tedious hours of travel by firing pictures in the scenes they passed, using the "pleasing horror" of the Alps, and remembering the "floods of lava" of Salvoir Rova, the "effects of light" and "delicate tints" of Claude's lay of landscapes, and "the solid judgment" and "true resemblance to Nature" of Poussin.

Printing and Painting the News in Victorian London Andrea Korda, 2017-07-05 Printing and Painting the News in Victorian London offers a fresh perspective on Social Realism by contextualizing it within the burgeoning new media environment of Victorian London Paintings labelled as Social Realist by Luke Fildes Frank Holl and Hubert Herkomer are frequently considered to typify the sentimental Victorian genre painting that quickly became outdated with the development of modernism Yet this book argues that the paintings must be considered as the result of the new experiences of modernity the urban poverty that the paintings represent and most importantly the advent of the mass produced illustrated news Fildes Holl and Herkomer worked for The Graphic a publication launched in 1869 as a rival to the dominant Illustrated London News The artists illustrations which featured the growing problem of urban poverty became the basis for large scale paintings that provoked controversy among their contemporaries and later became known as Social Realism This first in depth study of The Graphic and Social Realism uses the approach of media archaeology to unearth the modernity of these works showing that they engaged with the changing notions of objectivity and immediacy that nineteenth century new media cultivated In doing so this book proposes an alternative trajectory for the development of modernism that allows for a richer understanding of nineteenth century visual culture
