Challenger During the Years 1873-1876: Porulosa (Spumellaria and Acantharia) and Subclass Osculosa Ernst Heinrich Philipp August Haeckel,2020-09-28 The significance of the Radiolaria in regard to the relations of life in the ocean has been increased in a most unexpected manner by the discoveries of the Challenger Large swarms of these delicate Rhizopoda were found not only at the surface of the open ocean but also in its different bathymetrical zones Thousands of new species make up the wonderful Radiolarian ooze which covers large areas of the deep sea bed and was brought up from abysses of from 2000 to 4000 fathoms by the sounding machine of the Challenger They open a new world to morphological investigation When ten years ago in the autumn of 1876 I accepted the enticing invitation of Sir Wyville Thomson to undertake the investigation of these microscopic creatures I hoped to be able to accomplish the task with some degree of completeness within a period of from three to five years but the further my investigations proceeded the more immeasurable seemed the range of forms like the boundless firmament of stars I soon found myself compelled to decide between making a detailed study of a selection of special forms or giving as complete a survey as possible of the varied forms of the whole class and I decided upon the latter course having regard both to the general plan of the Challenger Reports and to the interests of our acquaintance with the class as a whole I must however confess at the close of my work that my original intention is far from having been fulfilled The extraordinary extent and varied difficulties of the undertaking must excuse the many deficiencies The special examination of the Challenger collection was for the most part completed in the summer of 1881 I collected its results in my Entwurf eines Radiolarien Systems auf Grund von Studien der Challenger Radiolarien Jenaische Zeitschr f Naturw Bd xv 1881 Since the manuscript of this preliminary communication was completed only a few days before my departure for Ceylon and since I was unable to correct the proofs myself several errors have crept into the Prodrömus Systematis Radiolarium included in it These have been corrected in the following more extensive working out of it Even at that time I had distinguished 630 genera and more than 2000 species but on the revision of these which I undertook immediately on my return from India this number was considerably increased The total number of forms here described amounts to 739 genera and 4318 species of these 3508 are new as against 810 previously described In spite of this large number however and in spite of the astonishing variety of the new and marvellous forms the riches of the Challenger collection are by no means exhausted A careful and patient worker who would devote a second decade to the work would probably increase the number of new forms especially of the smaller ones by more than a thousand but for a really complete examination the lifetime of one man would not suffice
