

PROUST and THREE DIALOGUES

(with Georges Duthuit)

SAMUEL BECKETT

In his foreword, the author says, "There is no allusion to the legendary life and death of Marcel Proust, nor to the garrulous old dowager of the Letters, nor to the poet, nor to the author of the Essays, nor to the Eau de Selzian correlative of Carlyle's "beautiful bottle of soda water" ". In other words this is a critical study of Proust the novelist, the first great European novelist of the century, and it is fitting that he should be put under the microscopic eye of Samuel Beckett, probably the outstanding novelist of the present time. This is the first English reprint of a study that first appeared in 1931 when the author as a young man had published no prose and was completely unknown except to a circle of friends. The breadth and maturity of this cool look at Proust is therefore all the more remarkable and the author's highly original approach is evident from the first page.

This volume also contains three dialogues which Mr. Beckett wrote down from memory in 1949, a record of discussions between himself and Georges Duthuit, the editor of the experimental review Transition. The dialogues deal with three painters, Tal Coat, André Masson and Bram Van Velde. Although each dialogue starts from a consideration of the style and intentions of the painter under discussion, the implications are much wider and deal ultimately with the purpose and the nature of art with the author generously allowing his adversary to stun him into silence on each occasion. The dialogues will tell the reader a great deal about Mr. Beckett and they offer a key to much of his own work.
