Young,2017-06-19 To succeed in achieving its national security objectives the United States needs to use Associative Power in place of both Hard Power and Soft Power Associative Power is the use of joint ventures and alliances to optimize the forms of power brought to bear in conflicts responding with precision to a spectrum of enemy threats situational challenges and political opportunities Associative Power was wisely and successfully used by the United States in the Vietnam War through the CORDS program of counter insurgency and village development to defeat the Viet Cong insurgency and permit the withdrawal of American combat forces Associative power was not used by the United States nor was the best counter insurgency practices of CORDS in the Iraq and Afghanistan conflicts As a result of this omission interim outcomes in Iraq and Afghanistan did not acceptably accomplish American objectives      Vietnam War Literature Ken Lopez,1990      Library of Congress Catalogs Library of Congress,1976      Cumulative Bibliography of Asian Studies, 1966-1970 ,1972

Committee on Foreign Relations,1970      Shades of CORDS in the Kush Henry Nuzum,2010 Counterinsurgency COIN requires an integrated military political and economic program best developed by teams that field both civilians and soldiers These units should operate with some independence but under a coherent command In Vietnam after several false starts the United States developed an effective unified organization Civil Operations and Revolutionary Development Support CORDS to guide the counterinsurgency CORDS had three components absent from our efforts in Afghanistan today sufficient personnel particularly civilian numerous teams and a single chain of command that united the separate COIN programs of the disparate American departments at the district provincial regional and national levels This paper focuses on the third issue and describes the benefits that unity of command at every level would bring to the American war in Afghanistan The work begins with a brief introduction to counterinsurgency theory using a population centric model and examines how this warfare challenges the United States It traces the evolution of the Provincial Reconstruction Teams PRTs and the country team describing problems at both levels Similar efforts in Vietnam are compared where persistent executive attention finally integrated the government s counterinsurgency campaign under the unified command of the CORDS program The next section attributes the American tendency towards a segregated response to cultural differences between the primary departments executive neglect and societal concepts of war The paper argues that in its approach to COIN the United States has forsaken the military concept of unity of command in favor of unity of effort expressed in multiagency literature The final sections describe how unified authority would improve our efforts in Afghanistan and propose a model for the future Page iii
