Some pressed on

It was not right about Australia and the continent being separated by a strait was about 100 miles out in his day of the continent, but in fact the Cape York is more than 10 degrees from the Equator.

It is likely sure that if some unknown seamen did visit America by chance rather than by design, on the other hand, there is some evidence that during the 15th century three expeditions set out from the colony of Peru, in search of the continent, and from them to reach the continent.

The expedition, comprising two ships, under the command of the Marquis, a nephew of the King of Peru, sailed from Callao in 1493. It became apparent that the continent was not where it was supposed to be, and the expedition was abandoned. But he was convinced, as he pressed on south, after some time, he came to a large island called Santa Ysabel.

He found no continent but many other large islands to the south. He had a brigantine built at Santa Ysabel, and he and his crew were sent on a voyage to the south. The expedition was abandoned after some time, but the discovery of a group of islands in the south was a great discovery.

A map of the world as it looked to Bartholomew the Portuguese.

Portuguese explorer, Vasco da Gama.

The world as it looked to Bartholomew the Portuguese. This map, devised by Bartholomew and his sons, shows the vague outline of a vast southern continent, Terra Australis. That such a land existed was first suggested by the Egyptian geographer Ptolemy in AD 200. Fifty years before this map was drawn up, Portuguese sailors may have touched on the north-west coast of Australia. Portugal's primary in exploration and discovery was due to the patronage of Prince Henry the Navigator (1394-1462) who most carefully prepared expeditions down the west coast of Africa, hoping to open sea routes to Ethiopia and the Far East. As a result of the Prince's efforts the Madeira Islands, the Azores and the Canaries were discovered.
