Politics In West Africa:

Politics in West Africa William Arthur Lewis, 1965 In these Whidden Lectures for 1965 delivered at McMaster University Professor Lewis has given a brilliant summary of what he has learned and thought on eleven visits to Africa during the last 12 years An international authority on political and economic theory Professor Lewis is also an acknowledged expert on African affairs who has known the Pan African leaders for thirty years and has shared their anti imperialism In his first lecture Professor Lewis analyzes the power structure in the thirteen independent states of West Africa and explains why in all but two Nigeria and Sierra Leone effective opposition parties have been suppressed He establishes the fact that West African societies do not represent a Marxist type struggle between rich and poor nor a struggle between a modernizing middle class and a backward aristocracy The ruling parties are neither left nor right Single parties are no natural response to conditions but have been created and are maintained by force Professor Lewis goes on to analyze the differences and disagreements within the West African states The biggest problem each faces is to weld disparate tribes into single nations with a common loyalty The author considers whether single party centralization or giving each group opportunities for limited self government within a decentralized democratic state is the more likely to succeed The third lecture considers the suitability for West Africa of the English or American system of excluding minorities from office and discusses the feasibility of coalition governments on which the hope of democratic institutions and the integrity of some states seem to depend Professor Lewis's informed discussion of French speaking West Africa will be welcomed because this region is often given scant consideration by writers in English All who have the opportunity of reading this book will be grateful for the opportunity the Whidden Lectures have given Professor Lewis for writing this clear sighted penetrating study of an important area in contemporary politics

Land and the Politics of Belonging in West Africa, 2005-12-01 Recognizing that land rights are ambiguous negotiable and politically embedded these case studies explore the long term processes and recent changes in contemporary rural West Africa affecting the conversion of control over land into social and political capital and vice versa They point to the colonial origins of what came to be viewed as customary tenure and to the legal pluralism characterizing pre colonial tenure arrangements Furthermore they show the spiritual and ritual importance of land that can be converted into political power and economic prerogatives a dimension neglected by much of the recent literature Analyses cover forest and savannah state and segmentary societies facilitating
