Michael Stary,Willie Bentley,2022-11-03 This book describes a mentoring relationship that began in 1999 between a forty year old white upper class physician and an eight year old African American boy from the inner city It is told in parallel we each wrote our recollections without reading each other s This was done so that neither of our writings would influence those of the other In some cases the memories actually differ or even conflict This is exactly the point that the book hopes to convey Due to our background and environments we viewed the same events differently sometimes creating very conflicting memories This is central to the misunderstandings people often have with one another as well as those that whole groups may have with one another It is especially true of the divide that exists between our races today We must try to see to experience and to feel something from a totally different perspective than our own We hope this book encourages the reader to reexamine relationships between individuals and groups in their own lives from a new perspective and experience the
