

Mexico: NAFTA – Far away, so close!

- NAFTA talks have extended for one year, but now a conclusion looks finally in sight.
- Despite the flurry of positive headlines, many thorny issues still remain unresolved.
- We expect a positive outcome, but getting a deal before 31 August appears unlikely.

Positive momentum with a breakthrough looming

A final deal, however, still looks far away

Several roadblocks still in the way

With 16 August marking the one-year anniversary of NAFTA renegotiations, a deal between Mexico and the US finally appears to be in sight. However, we wouldn't assign a high probability on getting a deal done before the end of this month. Instead, we expect Mexico and the US to make a breakthrough on bilateral issues, especially on the thorny auto sector rules.

The negotiations have been long-drawn and delayed by a range of issues and as forecast by us in Mexico: A guide to the NAFTA talks, dated 9 August 2017), we continue to expect the trade deal to remain in place. Recently, the talks between the US and Mexico have generated a flurry of upbeat news, with positive signs of a breakthrough emerging on two main thorny chapters – agricultural rules and auto sector rules of origin.

Yet, this would still leave most of the controversial issues unresolved. Idefonso Guajardo, chief negotiator for Mexico, recently stated that, in addition to the conclusion of around 10 out of a total of 30 NAFTA chapters, talks on nine others "are close to" completion. That would leave around 40% of the deal to be agreed on. However, here's the catch: negotiations on most of the controversial issues haven't made much progress recently, with the exception of the rules of origin for the auto sector.

We flag a range of sticking issues yet to be resolved (see Infocart 1). These include Chapters 11 and 19, which rule on provisions for investors and trade disputes settlements, respectively. Besides, labour issues haven't yet been dealt in depth – and remain an issue very close to the heart of Canada's more protective labour laws and for some of Trump's core constituency.

A risky bilateral strategy

Besides the above, the latest round of talks took place only between two of the three negotiating countries. Canada was largely left out of the talks, floating a bilateral deal between Mexico and the US as a possibility. This was reinforced by statements made by US officials. Canada is
