Abstract: The aims of this study is to look into the impact of e-government on reducing administrative burden in providing public services to citizens in the Department of Lands and Survey. The descriptive analytical research method was selected to attain the research objectives due of its utility in conducting social, business, and humanitarian studies. Employees from various employment positions made up the study sample, which included (600) male and female employees. Data was gathered from secondary sources by referring to prior studies, while primary data was gathered by using a questionnaire. The findings revealed that e-government applications have a significant role in improving the delivery of public services to citizens who visit the Department of Land and Survey, including (valid, reliable, transparent and fast public service delivery). It is recommended that the Department of Lands and Survey work continuously to update the e-government applications to keep up with changes in the business environment in providing public services, as well as provide training courses to employees to keep them informed of advancements in e-government applications. It is also recommended to give employees autonomy and the ability to participate in policymaking and decision making in order to lessen administrative hassles they face while doing their duties.

Keywords: E-Government, Administrative Burden, Department of Lands and Survey.

1 Introduction

Supply Many countries throughout the world have initiated electronic government efforts in the last 20 years [1-3]. These efforts involve the use of information and communication technology to improve government connection with individuals in order to provide a variety of public services [2, 4, 5]. The term "e-government," short for "electronic government," refers to the implementation and use of digital information technology to facilitate government-to-citizen interaction in the areas of information sharing, communication, and transaction processing [6-8]. E-government services usually increase government spending while lowering the private expenses of e-government stakeholders by eliminating paper handling costs, reducing message delivery time, and minimizing wait and search periods [9-11]. E-Government refers to the practice of enabling government-to-citizen interactions using electronic means, especially computers and the Internet. Its basic objectives may be subdivided into subcategories depending on the many ways that governments can assist their citizens and the business sector [12-14]. E-Government offers its citizens a number of benefits, the most important of which are the potential for a feedback mechanism to be provided by the citizen (who is the service customer) to the government (who is the service provider), the ability to receive services that are customized and personalized, the potential for a significant reduction in the amount of time required for delivery, and the possibility of accessing information about individuals or companies [15, 16]. E-commerce and e-procurement initiatives run by the government make it easier for the public and private sectors to communicate with one another [6, 17]. This helps most businesses lower their transaction costs, which in turn encourages the creation of new businesses [8, 11, 13, 18]. The E-Government initiative is one of the most significant subjects to discuss when it comes to the strategy and implementation of E-Government. Planning is often thought to begin with the determination of which electronic
