

Colonel Tarleton, On the 18th of April, 1791, on a Motion made by Mr. Wilberforce, for the Abolition of The Slave Trade
I believe I can state with the greatest accuracy and truth that the number of deaths in every hundred slaves transported by Liverpool merchants since the last regulation took place has not reached the average of four and one half in every hundred. The House will please observe that the exports from Liverpool, consisting of the manufactures of Manchester, Birmingham, Sheffield and other neighbouring towns, which amount to a very considerable sum annually, are not noticed, and other material circumstances.

The correspondence between John Gladstone Esq. M.P. and James Cropper Esq. on the present state of slavery in the British West Indies

Mr Cropper boldly states that were the Negroes free, they would be both more willing and better labourers than they are in their present situation. Everyone who has been to the West Indies...assures me that the fact is quite contrary...in general, the manumitted Negroes are idle, indolent and slothful...though they possessed good characters while they were slaves.

Robert Norris, captain of a slave ship, describes conditions on the slave ships (1788)

[The slaves] had sufficient room, sufficient air, and sufficient provisions. When upon deck, they made merry and amused themselves with dancing... In short, the voyage from Africa to the West Indies was one of the happiest periods of a Negro's life.

Cursory remarks on the emancipation of slaves (1824)

It would be as vain to enforce a code of laws on the inhabitants of the moon as to civilise Africans, and render them sensible of the blessings which Europeans enjoy from their industry, and superior civil and religious institutions; the climate they inhabit is wholly opposed to it.

From a manual for plantation owners
