Course Objectives

This course discusses theories of personality from Freud to the present. At the end of the course, you will be familiar with the common theoretical approaches to personality (type, trait, psychodynamic, humanistic, cognitive, learning, evolutionary), and will understand the concepts involved in one or more specific theories from most of these approaches and will appreciate the strengths and weaknesses of each.

In addition to the specifics of several theories, I hope that you will have a clearer understanding of the nature and purpose of theories in science, and an appreciation for the interesting relationship between theory and 'reality'.
