Learning to Govern Together in Representative Democracy Thomas König,Xiao Lu,Thiago N. Silva,2025-04-29 Learning to Govern Together in Representative Democracy introduces a dynamic theory on coalition governance and circular regression for studying joint policy making of coalition parties which considers the pro tempore nature of representative democracy Because representative democracy limits the time to govern the implementation of a common policy agenda is temporarily constrained In parliamentary democracies in which coalition governance is the rule this temporal constraint demands that coalition parties overcome their collective action problems in joint policy making within a term This book argues that the cooperative and competitive incentives of coalition parties vary over time In the beginning of a term coalition parties only have a prior belief about the type of partnership and ministerial office holders who are responsible for the implementation of a common policy agenda do not know how many bills they will initiate and whether their partner will respond cooperatively or competitively to their bill proposals Over time however they can learn this type from experienced interactions in joint policy making to optimize the timing of further bill initiation To derive propositions and hypotheses on timing of bill initiation the authors distinguish two learning models a portfolio model with autonomous learning from experienced interactions within the own jurisdiction and a partisan model with considering experienced interactions of co partisan office holders The empirical examination of these models for the timing of bill initiation covers 11 parliamentary democracies in which about 25 000 government bills were initiated and immediately approved or scrutinized in parliament The findings show that ministerial office holders infer the type of partnership from the duration of parliamentary scrutiny and initiate further bill proposals either early if they learned about a cooperative type that immediately approved their bills or late if they learned about a competitive type that subjected their bills to intense parliamentary scrutiny The results further reveal variation across the periods of a term in which the cooperative and competitive incentives of coalition parties vary due to the temporal constraints for representative democracy The book provides an understanding of the dynamics of coalition effectiveness stability of coalition government and satisfaction with coalition governance which are determined by learning about the cooperative or competitive partnership type portfolio or partisan learning and the early or late timing of bill initiation

Institutional Design and Party Government in Post-Communist Europe Csaba Nikolenyi, 2014-10-30 This book examines the institutional foundations of coalition government in the ten post communist democracies of Eastern and Central Europe for the 1990-2010 period Bulgaria the Czech Republic Estonia Hungary Latvia Lithuania Poland Romania Slovakia and Slovenia Its central argument is that differences in the arrangement of political institutions systematically explain variations in patterns of multi party government across these states The book starts with the premise that electoral systems and constitutional provisions about the powers the structure and the relationship between parliament and the presidency determine the degree to which political power is dispersed or concentrated in the political system On the basis of these institutional features three groups of states are distinguished with regard to their degree of power concentration the substantive chapters of the book demonstrate how these institutional combinations and differences shape three specific facets of party government which capture the main stages of the lifecycle of coalitions governments the formation of electoral coalitions government formation and government duration Specifically three comparative chapters assess the impact of institutional power concentration on the size of electoral coalitions the likelihood that political parties form a minority government and the number of days that a government lasts in office The main finding of the book is that power concentration matters political parties in those democracies where institutions are designed to concentrate political power tend to form large electoral coalitions they tend to form majority rather than undersized governments and they build more durable cabinets In addition the book contains a detailed case study of government formation in Hungary and a previously unstudied comparison of indirect presidential elections in four states the Czech Republic Estonia Hungary and Latvia Comparative Politics is a series for students teachers and researchers of political science that deals with contemporary government and politics Global in scope books in the series are characterised by a stress on comparative analysis and strong methodological rigour The series is published in association with the European Consortium for Political Research For more information visit www.ecprnet.eu
