Frank Dobie's first books and the one that helped gain him national prominence as a folklorist In it he recounts the tales and legends of those hardy souls who searched for buried treasure in the Southwest following in the footsteps of that earlier gold seeker the Spaniard Coronado These people Dobie writes in his introduction no matter what language they speak are truly Coronado's inheritors I have called them Coronado's children They follow Spanish trails buffalo trails cow trails they dig where there are no trails but oftener than they dig or prospect they just sit and tell stories of lost mines of buried bullion by the jack load This is the tale spinning Dobie at his best dealing with subjects as irresistible as ghost stories and haunted houses As entrancing a volume as one is likely to pick up in a month of Sundays The New York Times Dobie has discovered for us a native Arabian Night Chicago Evening Post

Ranald Mackenzie and a lone Comanche brave high school athletes and desperately lonely teachers all come under his scrutiny and are hauntingly considered for their stories their limitations and the sense of place they afford Nostalgia wonderment and a healthy and imaginative provincialism color the pages of this book which is well illustrated with the author's own pen and ink sketches of the places and things he remembers The vibrantly concrete details of daily existence in a bygone time in a remote and desolate area of Texas are startlingly juxtaposed with philosophical musings about the limitations all of us face in comprehending even that little bit of life we live Can poetry or water be found in West Texas Corder asks at one point His answer if such it be makes it worth our getting lost with him in this journey of the heart and mind
