TONE of the play

A sort of spiralling insanity that wears its morality lightly but indignantly, while piling on the violence. McDonagh's style has a purpose - to form a bridge over the sorrows; moments of humanity cannot survive in such a blighted world. CREATING MOMENTS

The play works with a traditional structure but it is a play which uses "moments" to drive home its themes. These "moments" are points the action moves to and from.

Characters and their relationships create moments of both humour and discomfort by juxtaposing feelings of love and loss and yearning against frustrated, tragic lives. Arbitrary events become justification for the most extreme actions
