The War That Must Not Occur Jean-Pierre Dupuy, 2023-09-19

The possibility of a nuclear war that could destroy civilization has influenced the course of international affairs since 1945 suspended like a sword of Damocles above the heads of the world's leaders The fact that we have escaped a third world war involving strategic nuclear weapons indeed that no atomic weapon of limited power has yet been used under battlefield conditions seems nothing short of a miracle Revisiting debates on the effectiveness and ethics of nuclear deterrence Jean Pierre Dupuy is led to reformulate some of the most difficult questions in philosophy He develops a counterintuitive but powerful theory of apocalyptic prophecy once a major catastrophe appears to be possible one must assume that it will in fact occur Dupuy shows that the contradictions and paradoxes riddling discussions of deterrence arise from the tension between two opposite conceptions of time one in which the future depends on decisions and strategy and another in which every occurring event is one that could not have failed to occur Considering the immense destructive power of nuclear warheads and the almost unimaginable ruin they are bound to cause Dupuy reaches a provocative conclusion whether they bring about good or evil does not depend on the present or future intentions of those who are in a position to use them The mere possession of nuclear weapons is a moral abomination

Non-Offensive Defence for the Twenty-First Century Bjorn

Threats of Force

Francis Grimal, 2013 Adopting an interdisciplinary approach and drawing on the works of strategic literature and international relations theory this book examines the theoretical nature behind a threat of force in order to inform and explain why and how the normative structure operates in the way it does The core of the book addresses whether Article 2 4 is adequately suited to the current international climate and if not whether an alternative means of rethinking Article 2 4 would provide a better solution
