Brian R. T. Frost

Nuclear Fuel Performance:

Nuclear Fuel Elements Brian R. T. Frost, 2013-10-22 Nuclear Fuel Elements Design Fabrication and Performance is concerned with the design fabrication and performance of nuclear fuel elements with emphasis on fast reactor fuel elements Topics range from fuel types and the irradiation behavior of fuels to cladding and duct materials fuel element design and modeling fuel element performance testing and qualification and the performance of water reactor fuels Fast reactor fuel elements research and test reactor fuel elements and unconventional fuel elements are also covered This volume consists of 12 chapters and begins with an overview of nuclear reactors and fuel elements as well as fuel element design and development based on the reactor operator s approach materials scientist s approach and interdisciplinary approach The reader is then introduced to different types of nuclear fuels and their irradiation behavior considerations for using cladding and duct materials in fuel element design and development and fuel element design and modeling The chapters that follow focus on the testing of fuel element performance experimental techniques and equipment for testing fuel element designs and the performance of fuels for water reactors Fuel elements for gas cooled reactors fast reactors and research and test reactors are also described The book concludes with an assessment of unconventional fuel elements This book will be useful to fuel element technologists as well as materials scientists and engineers Nuclear Fuel Performance M. Performance and Management Pierre Zaleski, 1976 Application of Data-driven Methods in Nuclear Fuel Performance Analysis Yifeng Che, 2022 Accurately predicting the behavior of nuclear fuel performance is essential for the safe and economic operation of nuclear reactors Computer codes of different fidelities have been developed over past decades to simulate the behavior of nuclear fuels such as the multi dimensional parallel finite element based code BISON and the NRC auditing code FRAPCON Multiple areas of research remain to be addressed in fuel performance while physics based approaches often reach their limits Studies to be presented in this thesis therefore revolve around applying data driven methods to address these issues First discrepancies always exist between code predictions and real world responses thus uncertainties must be quantified for the code predictions for benefit of decision making operation safety and design optimization Systematic validation and verification are performed for BISON first followed by a holistic sensitivity analysis SA framework built upon a complete set of uncertain input parameters The number of uncertain input parameters can be effectively reduced based on the obtained qualitative importance ranking benefiting the subsequent uncertainty quantification UQ To enhance the predictability a novel Bayesian inference framework is introduced to efficiently calibrate the expensive high fidelity tools possibly without resorting to approximate surrogate methods The calibrated prediction aligns better with experimental observations and is subject to significantly reduced uncertainty Second while full core monitoring of fuel behaviors can provide the most realistic assessment of safety margins its computational cost for use in design and operation optimization is prohibitive Machine learning ML methods were used to construct fast running full core surrogates which achieves a runtime acceleration of more than 10 000 1 000 times compared to FRAPCON for the standard high burnup PWR cores allowing for direct coupling of full core fuel response into core design optimization in the future Then for purpose of full core PCI monitoring which requires BISON as the high fidelity simulation tool a physics informed multi fidelity ML framework is introduced to significantly reduce the number of necessary code runs Finally deep learning models are trained to predict the spatiotemporal distribution of the cladding hoop stress The proposed data driven methods for the selected applications enlightens the nuclear community on practical pathways to realize meaningful improvements in fuel performance assessment
