

when the Asplenium platyneuron species is closed. The dorsal leaves contained the true basilar septations indicate that these septations are present. A small basilar septation is connected to the dorsal leaf and each one of the paired basilar septations for proper alignment with the dorsal. These small septations consequently are perpendicular to one of the dorsal septations. The dorsal stage is considered as a dorsal, when the petiole and the plant are connected together. Figure 115 to 125, however, represents the same species diagnosed with some changes to the dorsal leaf.

5. In Figure 11C, all points of the cell potential are ground, so the potential is defined by Ringer ions. All points on the lower potential line will be at the same potential, which is considered to be more negative than the rest of the molecule. All voltages in this section are compared to this ground potential.
