

A. Alliance with France

- From 1776 to 1778, France aided the Americans secretly, providing loans, gifts of money, and weapons → the French refused to openly ally with the Americans until certain the war could be won
- In December 1776, Benjamin Franklin arrived in France on a diplomatic mission to try to persuade the French to join forces with the Americans → a writer, inventor, politician, etc., Franklin was perhaps the most famous American in the world, and was highly respected in France, but his success in securing the help of the French would be slow in coming
 - France wanted payback against Britain for the loss in the French and Indian War, but didn't want to commit to a lost cause → by mid-1777, the Americans had lost most big battles against the British
- The decisive American victory at Saratoga, New York, in October 1777, marked a turning point in the Revolutionary War → not only had the British failed to capture the state of New York, the win also convinced France it could safely enter the war on the American side
- In 1778, the French and Americans signed treaties that recognized the United States as an independent nation, encouraged trade between the two nations, and established a military alliance against Britain → France would send a naval fleet, ground troops, and supplies to assist the Continental Army in the war; the combination of American and French forces ultimately helped secure the surrender of the British in 1783

B. Valley Forge

- In September and October 1777, while American and British soldiers faced off at Saratoga, General George Washington was defeated by British General William Howe in battles at Brandywine and Germantown, Pennsylvania → these defeats resulted in the British capture of Philadelphia, the American capital
- As 1777 came to a close, things looked bleak for Washington and the Continental Army → Philadelphia was occupied by the British and some of the Congress had begun to question Washington's abilities as a leader
- In December 1777, Washington moved his battered army of 11,000 into winter quarters at Valley Forge → about 20 miles northwest of Philadelphia, the area was elevated and easily defensible, and close enough to keep an eye on the British and prevent surprise attacks on the Pennsylvania countryside
 - Upon arrival, Washington ordered his soldiers to construct log huts and search the countryside for straw to use as bedding (there was a shortage of blankets); the men also built defensive trenches (ditches) and redoubts (temporary forts)
- The winter spent at Valley Forge is often considered the darkest of the war → Washington's men did not have adequate food or shelter, and the Congress had failed to provide much-needed supplies
 - Some 3,000 men were without shoes (they protected their feet with rags), many did not have a decent coat, and there was never enough to eat; hundreds of horses and oxen died of starvation, forcing men to yoke themselves to draw heavy wagons of provisions → an estimated 2,500 soldiers starved, froze to death, or died from smallpox or pneumonia, and some 2,000 deserted
