John Gray, the Financial Times "Chief and senior editor," writes: "British 'Tough' means that the government is not prepared to compromise with anybody, not even the United Nations. It is not a matter of 'if' but of 'when' the British will come to grips with the world. It is a complete shift from the 'soft' stance of a Thatcherite 'if' to the 'tough' stance of a 'when' in the current Conservative government. It is a change from a policy of 'if' to a policy of 'when'—and, at every occasion, with no hesitation whatsoever, that will come upon it, including the possibility of a war with the Arabs."

British foreign policy, already a century-long, is now becoming more and becoming more aggressive. It is simply not only a matter of "if" but of "when" it will come to grips with the world. It is a complete shift from the "soft" stance of a Thatcherite "if" to the "tough" stance of a "when" in the current Conservative government. It is a change from a policy of "if" to a policy of "when"—and, at every occasion, with no hesitation whatsoever, that will come upon it, including the possibility of a war with the Arabs.

The image shows a close-up of an open manuscript. The left page, folio 10v, is filled with dense, handwritten text in a single column. The right page, folio 11r, features a large, detailed drawing of a landscape. The drawing depicts a winding path or river leading towards a distant building or structure, possibly a castle or a church. The style of the drawing is characteristic of the 15th or 16th century, with fine lines and shading. Above the drawing, there is some handwritten text, which appears to be a title or a description of the scene. The overall condition of the manuscript is good, with clear handwriting and a well-preserved drawing.
