General Pepe proceeded to Barcelona when the counter revolution was imminent at Naples and his life was no longer safe there and to the same city went several of the Piedmontese revolutionists when their country was Austrianized after the same lawless fashion. Scavini and Ugoni took refuge at Geneva; others of the proscribed proceeded to London. This dispersion and the progress which Carbonarism was making in France suggested to General Pepe the idea of an international secret society which should combine for a common purpose the advanced political reformers of all the European States.
