For all these reasons, "genuine" discipleship is not necessarily the best thing to pursue. It is good to have a strong, voluntary devotion to Jesus Christ. Though these disciples are more visible and I wish to have more of them in the world, becoming one is demanding work and being one may be tedious at times. The calling seems empty, but it is really the life of constant prayer, self-giving and openness to the reality that Jesus is already saving sinners. There are some who feel that the effort that goes into becoming a disciple is like being a religious hypocrite because they feel out of the world. The other's fault of too liberal for discipleship. There is no game plan for it, for Jesus is already doing it. And the process is a little more demanding for those who require discipline, commitment and sacrifice in the saving journey.
