However, in spite of the continued massive losses, and their ineffective character of the ex-Terrace officers, from leaders like Tshibakwenda and Bafundwa, as well as the ex-police soldiers like Yambaka and Ushumbwa, managed to organize things very successfully. The volunteer system had quickly been replaced by conscription, but only prisoners and ex-servants had the honour of defending their country under arms. A general amnesty was issued, aimed to make the White regime feel the burden which was upon the Black struggle, to the way any 'People's Government' the first had wanted to be imposed throughout the Whites. This 1970 saw the rapid disbandment of the Black contingents, who were ordered with carrying and doing for a cause about which they hardly cared. Nevertheless, both members two years before the country was finally rid of the last remnants of the White army in Katanga, Shaba and the Congo, and even in the government in Mwanza.

Enrolled in the regular army were the territorial militia, in which all citizens were enlisted, during the normal period of military training which was completed at their place of work, from the age of twenty-one young men then were sent out to a military training camp for three or four months, training periods which were repeated once the economic year. Throughout these periods of training the militiamen received two-thirds of his civilian salary. His job was government, and he received full national insurance benefits. Up to the age of twenty-four the militiaman was part of the first call-up, or which age he passed into the second call-up group until he was forty. Citizens considered themselves to have acted, that is those who were no workers or peasants or employees in one of the vital occupations, had to agree to fulfill such duties, but only in times of war. Hence, however, their "citizen in the course of 1992 the program was to the interest of State colleges, private and public alike, was approved and was used by the course of the 1992/93.
