Real Running:

Real Women Run Sandra Faulkner, 2018-01-17 Real Women Run is an innovative feminist ethnography that consists of a series of linked essays and presentations about women who run at the intersections of queer feminist and running identities Faulkner uses feminist grounded theory poetic inquiry and qualitative content analysis to examine women's embodied stories of running how they run how running fits into the context of their lives and relationships how they enact or challenge cultural scripts of women's activities and normative running bodies and what running means for their lives and identities During a two and a half year ethnography with women who run Faulkner engaged in an intersectional qualitative content analysis of websites and blogs targeted to women runners a grounded theory poetic analysis of 41 interviews with women who run and participant observation at road races Real Women Run speaks to the call for a more physical feminism This ethnography sees women's physical and mental strength developed through running as a way to embrace the contradictions between a deconstructed focus on the mind/body split and the focus on individuals' actual material bodies and their everyday interactions with their bodies and through their bodies with the world around them

Long-Run Determinants of the Real Exchange Rate Mr.Hamid Faruquee,1994-08-01 This paper examines the long run determinants of the real exchange rate from a stock flow perspective The empirical analysis estimates a long run relationship between the real exchange rate net foreign assets and other factors affecting trade flows Using postwar data for the United States and Japan cointegration analysis supports the finding that the structural factors underlying each country's net trade and net foreign asset positions determine the long run path for the real value of the dollar and the yen The empirical analysis also provides estimates for the underlying stochastic trend in each real exchange rate series

Real and Nominal Exchange Rates in the Long Run Mr.Bankim Chadha,Mr.Charles Adams,1991-06-01 This paper decomposes longer run movements in major dollar real exchange rates into components associated with changes in nominal exchange rates and price levels and their comovements Though the decompositions suggest some permanent movements they imply that there are large transitory components in real exchange rates These transitory components in real exchange rates are found to be closely associated with those in nominal exchange rates A stochastic version of Dornbusch's overshooting model configured with representative parameter values for the United States and subjected to permanent nominal shocks can rationalize these transitory comovements of nominal and real exchange rates as well as several other features of the decompositions

The Determinants of U.S. Real Interest Rates in the Long Run Ms.Sharmini Coorey,1991-12-01 This paper examines the factors which influence the behavior of real interest rates in the United States over the long run Data on real and nominal returns to bonds and equities are tested for unit root non stationarity The results indicate that real and nominal interest rates and inflation are integrated of order one while the evidence on returns to equities is mixed Short and long term real rates were found to be cointegrated with government deficits government debt relative to GNP private wealth real balances relative to GNP demographic factors and the marginal productivity of capital demographic fiscal and monetary policy variables appear to be particularly significant

Do Long-Run Productivity Differentials Explain Long-Run Real Exchange Rates? Mr.Enrique G. Mendoza,Patrick K. Asea,1994-05-01

We develop a two country balanced growth intertemporal general equilibrium model to examine two predictions of the

Balassa Samuelson model namely that i productivity differentials determine the domestic relative price of nontradables and ii deviations from purchasing power parity reflect differences in the relative price of nontradables In our model the equilibrium relative price of nontradables along the long run balanced growth path is determined by the ratio of the marginal products of labor in the tradable and nontradable sectors The empirical relevance of the Balassa Samuelson predictions is examined using the Hodrick Prescott filter to extract long run components from a panel database for fourteen OECD countries The evidence indicates that labor productivity differentials do explain long run cross country differences in relative prices The predicted relative prices however are of little help in explaining long run deviations from purchasing power parity
