

Introduction

In analytical philosophy, a moral practice is not merely a virtue but an indispensable identity of an agency. A moral practice is conceived to be the result of ethical disposition to act on the part of an agency. It is argued in the tradition of rationalist morality that a rational human agency is essentially identified with sound moral practices. A moral practice is a set of consistently repeated actions, which are motivated by a reason explicable in terms of a spirit of virtue and a sense of care for others in the surrounding and whose contents are evaluated and judged to be either good or right or obligatory in nature. It is argued that there are normative forces inherent in the reason of an agency which demands a specific type of actions to be repeatedly undertaken in a consistent manner so as to constitute a moral practice. Given the acceptance of such concepts of rationality in association with morality, a rational agent by virtue of being so-called created by the categorical imperative is inevitably a moral agent.

In the arena of real-life observation and experience, there are however a number of frequently occurring instances of greed-neglect, apathy and impulsivity as aberrations in moral practices on part of an otherwise rational agency that in turn results in some disregard for considerations of other-regarding interests and needs. Missing the demands of obligation, not keeping the promises and executing actions with some disregard for the concerns of goodness and righteousness have become persistent observations in day-to-day actually lived life. In modern contemporaneous times, the deviations from moral practices have become quite pervasive. Such real-life pervasive deviations from the sound moral practices are enough evidences for the breakdown of claims regarding the co-existentiality of morality and rationality in a project of a rational design of human life. The Greek moral philosophy did not go beyond “akrasia” or “weaknesses of the will” in explaining the digression and divergence from moral course of action. In a Kantian framework of moral philosophy, such aberrations have not been convincingly accommodated. Whatever other explanations exist in the literature, these also do not go very far.

The philosophical psychology has some promises in accounting for diversions and deviations of practices as contractions on morality. While the abstract, conceptual and theoretical investigation of the categories of agency, reason and morality and rationalist theoretical paradigms is important in analytical philosophy, the significance of philosophical psychology for ethical analysis is not to be underestimated. In popular image, the reach of ethics is rather wide enough to be responsive to empirical facts and evidence provided by researchers in social psychology and neurology. There has been an odd relation of ethics with philosophical psychology since the latter has been concerned with the empirical investigation of the facts and evidence. It is possible in the domain of philosophical psychology to explain the pervasive modern-life phenomenon of greed-neglect, impulsivity and apathy on part of a large number of human beings. Since mind (brain plus intentionality plus something) is quintessential the medium through the categories of which a human agency reasons, the health of brain matters in the formation of ethical disposition to act. In a rational human agency, the formation of ethical disposition is ever poised to be a natural process; it is however never spontaneous. It has been argued long ago by the Greek philosopher, Aristotle that the formation of such dispositions needed proper education and careful upbringing. In addition to education and upbringing of a human agent, the status of the health of brain of an acting person is quite significant. A rational
