My Grieving Soul Wayne Eggleston,2002-05-01 Walking with Miss Zib Richard D. Tobin,2022-03-09 The title Walking with Miss Zib came from emotions I experienced during a three year period succeeding my wife s Ellen s death from Alzheimer s disease We met when I was fifteen and she was sixteen Try and visualize what a loss that was for me It changed my life forever It s not an easy task to go on without her as you can imagine The suffering remained intense penetrating deep into my soul Contemplating my anguish it s clear to me now that the pain was from the soul not the body After a great deal of reflection I conclude Ellen s body had Alzheimer s disease her soul didn t Our souls communicated directly circumventing her body with Alzheimer s disease two souls connected for over sixty seven years As a result Ellen knew me till her last day on earth Focusing on my grieving and putting into words the manner in which I survived I will provide a true account of my experience with grief over a lifetime Covering from the age of nineteen to the passing of Ellen revealing my most inner emotions each time One needn t have a medical or scientific background like sporting a PhD to write about their emotions while suffering through a heartbreaking life experience All one requires is courage to reveal their true feelings and eagerness to help others I walk with Miss Zib s spirit guiding me home and end with a quote taken from a headstone in Ireland which I find so grand Death leaves a heartache no one can heal love leaves a memory no one can steal
