The Lord's Resistance Army Tim Allen, Koen Vlassenroot, 2010-07-08 The Lord's Resistance Army is Africa's most persistent and notorious terrorist group. Led by the mysterious Joseph Kony, it has committed a series of horrific human rights abuses including massacres and mutilations. Since the mid 1980s it has abducted tens of thousands of people including large numbers of children forced to train as fighters. The IC in 2005 issued warrants for Kony and his top commanders and the United States is backing a military campaign against the group. But the LRA survives continuing to inspire both fascination and fear. Authoritative but provocative The Lord's Resistance Army provides the most comprehensive analysis of the group available. From the roots of the violence to the oppressive responses of the Ugandan government and the failures of the international community, this collection looks at this most brutal of conflicts in fascinating depth and includes a remarkable first hand interview with Kony himself.

Israeli Settlement Assistance to Zambia, Nigeria and Nepal Moshe Schwartz, 2002 This study highlights the evolution of Israeli assisted co-operative settlements set up in Zambia, Nigeria and Nepal in the 1960s. It looks into the background of Israel's settlement assistance and describes the features, effects and sustainability of the projects. This book also shows that major developments such as the oil crisis, the decline in copper prices, Zambia, the Biafran war, Nigeria and rapid population growth, Nepal had a profound influence on the projects' development.

Refugee-driven and Policy-driven Resettlement Odessa Gonzalez Benson, 2017 Refugee resettlement policy forwards its goal of socioeconomic integration through appropriate geographic placement and service provision. However, refugees and their communities naturally very much also determine their own resettlement via self placement and refugee based services. My research examines a self placement or onward migration patterns by refugees and b service provision by refugee run community organizations and the ways in which those patterns and services intersect with policy. By examining resettlement as refugee driven, this dissertation complements existing U.S. based research, the bulk of which primarily draws from the perspective of policy and institutions. This research is nationwide in scope and applies a case study approach focusing on Bhutanese refugees, one of the new refugee cohorts in the post 9/11 era of resettlement in the United States. Empirically, I apply both quantitative and qualitative methods to examine data from several sources and I partnered with refugee organizations for primary data collection, participant recruitment and analyses. In the quantitative part of the dissertation, I lay the national landscape of primary arrival, placement and onward migration patterns of Bhutanese refugees in maps and then conduct multivariate analysis of relevant city level factors with particular focus on local immigrant policies and labor markets For the qualitative part I conducted semi structured interviews and four focus groups with key members of 40 Bhutanese refugee organizations in 30 cities across the United States I analyze themes and patterns in the data to formulate a typology of services and to understand scope of service provision and then theorize how refugees organizations fit within broader policy systems and institutional networks Informed by a refugee driven perspective on resettlement findings reveal theoretical insights and practical relevance for policy and practice with refugees

Refugee Admissions and Resettlement Policy Andorra Bruno, 2015 The Politics and Implementation of U.S. Refugee Resettlement Policy: A Street-level Analysis, 2015 This dissertation tells a story of a refugee resettlement policy still in flux In spite of the intentions of The Refugee Act to standardize the workers in this study continued to reformulate policy with their everyday practice choices This study finds that 1 the complex refugee admissions allocations and funding structures drive inconsistency and unreliability down the organizational chain so that the consequences are felt at the point of service delivery 2 local resettlement organizations cope with the inconsistent and unreliable flow of clients and associated funds in different ways that in turn differentially impact the services provided to refugee clients 3 refugee resettlement organizations and their caseworkers are influenced by the performance measures associated with their grant contracts and 4 refugee resettlement policy implementation differs across agencies depending on the levels of resources at the workers disposal worker identity and the culture of the agencies and the extent to which workers engaged in capacity building behaviors such as establishing and maintaining good relationships with partner organizations and companies

Participatory Inclusion in the Refugee Resettlement Process, 2002 This study explores the disconnection that exists between refugee policy developers and those whom they intend to benefit by bringing the voices of refugees and their supporters into community discussions on policies and practices that directly affect the refugee resettlement experience The purpose of their involvement was to help ensure that resettlement activities were relevant to their needs In an effort to make the findings as generalizable as possible the researcher applied techniques of Participatory Action Research Carr Kemmis 1986 within a Grounded Theory Glaser Strauss 1967 methodological framework Community consultations involving a total of 86 refugees refugee claimants and their supporters in three cities were conducted during the period that Canada was responding to post 9 11 concerns for national security with its first implementation of the Immigration and Refugee Protection Act Findings from those consultations were triangulated with data from interviews with 29 service providers government officials and individual refugees as well as documentary evidence from scholarly research government publications and mass media sources Implications for further policy development were then developed from that process Findings from the research suggest that the potential for unexpected policy outcomes can be reduced if culturally sensitive community consultations in the preferred language of the community are incorporated in policy development and implementation processes These findings can contribute to building local community capacities to increase the effectiveness of resettlement activities and improving their sustainability by inviting those who have the most to benefit take ownership of them
