packed with frit to a high enough temperature to melt the glass The kiln is held for a period of time at the high temperature to allow the frit to fuse completely flow into and fill the mold The pate de verre process is flexible allowing one to sculpt glass into forms not normally achieved with other glass working processes The glass casting once fired takes on characteristics that evoke other media marble quartz stone quite unlike our normal associations with glass Yet the piece retains that quality of glass I find most fascinating and alluring the ability to capture the light that passes into the glass body and reflect it back out It is these characteristics the enduring appearance of material and the hint of life and glow from within that enable my sculptural work to begin to speak about life and its struggles our fragility and our strength
