

SELF- & TIME- MANAGEMENT PLANNER

Behavioral Tools that Get Stuff Done

This is not a standard daily planner. Through practice, discover a personalized method to make the most of your time.

Self- and time-management aren't about being the most productive person. They're not about comparing yourself to others. Self- and time-management are about discovering your values and priorities and ensuring you can make time for yourself, your family and friends, outside of work and school. They're about setting personal and attainable goals while using data to change your behavior.

One size doesn't fit all. It would be easy to skip the introduction and just start using the planner, but that is not the inspiration behind this planner. Through self-reflection and an I Do, We Do, You Do method you can find the simplest way for you to prioritize what is important in your life. Don't do it like me; do it like you.

Shauna M. Costello received her BS and MA in the science of human behavior from Western Michigan University where she first discovered her passion for self- & time-management. She has taken this passion into her work as a performance and project manager and has been training her supervisees in these practices for over seven years. Using the foundations of the science of human behavior and life experience, she has learned to prioritize her values and needs. This understanding enabled her to go back to school while working full-time, to complete her Master of Public Policy graduate degree at Michigan State University. Adjusting to constant change, she is now on to her next adventure of motherhood and relearning the meaning of self- and time-management.
