Creating the Other Nancy M. Wingfield, 2004-09-01 The historic myths of a people nation usually play an important role in the creation and consolidation of the basic concepts from which the self image of that nation derives These concepts include not only images of the nation itself but also images of other peoples Although the construction of ethnic stereotypes during the long nineteenth century initially had other functions than simply the homogenization of the particular culture and the exclusion of others from the public sphere the evaluation of peoples according to criteria that included level of civilization yielded rankings of ethnic groups within the Habsburg Monarchy That provided the basis for later more divisive ethnic characterizations of exclusive nationalism as addressed in this volume that examines the roots and results of ethnic nationalist and racial conflict in the region from a variety of historical and theoretical perspectives

Midlife Crisis Susanne Schmidt, 2020-03-12 The phrase midlife crisis today conjures up images of male indulgence and irresponsibility an affluent middle aged man speeding off in a red sports car with a woman half his age but before it become a gendered cliché it gained traction as a feminist concept. Journalist Gail Sheehy used the term to describe a midlife period when both men and women might reassess their choices and seek a change in life. Sheehy's definition challenged the double standard of middle age where aging is advantageous to men and detrimental to women by viewing midlife as an opportunity rather than a crisis. Widely popular in the United States and internationally the term was quickly appropriated by psychological and psychiatric experts and redefined as a male centered masculinist concept. The first book length history of this controversial concept, Susanne Schmidt's Midlife Crisis recounts the surprising origin story of the midlife debate and traces its movement from popular culture into academia. Schmidt's engaging narrative telling of the feminist construction and ensuing antifeminist backlash of the midlife crisis illuminates a lost legacy of feminist thought shedding important new light on the history of gender and American social science in the 1970s and beyond.

Child Development and Teaching Pupils with Special Educational Needs Anne Anderson, Richard Gerrish, Lyn Layton, Jenny Morgan, Christina Tilstone, Anna Williams, 2013-04-15 A thought provoking book which provides a framework for understanding the physical sensory emotional social linguistic and cognitive development of children with special educational needs. It gives practitioners and students a sound grasp of the theoretical ground needed to fully understand cognitive development and will help them track children's developmental progress in order to optimise learning opportunities. The authors handle complex topics in a highly accessible manner explaining how to put theory into practice. In three lucidly argued sections they present an overview of the work of key theorists and thinkers including Vygotsky, Piaget, Freud, Erikson, Bruner and the Koring theorists, an evaluation of the educational implications of the work of each theorist using illustrative case studies, a consideration of areas of development in learning and teaching children with special educational needs. This book will be a beacon for teachers, head teachers, educational psychologists and all practitioners involved in special needs education who seek the opportunity to help empower their pupils and enhance their own understanding.
