

TO THE PASSENGERS on the bus Cochetería de la México travelling between the capital and San Luis Potosí in four hours, more or less, once out of the ever-spreading suburbs that ring the city of México there is little to break the monotonous gradient of the high plains. For most of the journey, the bus traverses a dry upland country, only gradually firmer, that runs in scarcely perceptible undulations toward distant mountains the color of twilight. Occasionally some cattle are grazing single file along the dried-up bed of an arroyo. Once or twice a countryman is hurrying his donkeys across the highway with the help of a stout rope and a handle of twigs that serves as a switch. Now and then the passengers who have not dozed off in their reclining seats, or lost themselves in a newspaper or book, may notice a kind of interruption in the continuous vacancy of the countryside, a house perhaps so unimpaired by the vastness of the surrounding country that it does its best to conceal itself. Low, built of mud bricks, roofed with thatch or the broad curved leaves of the agave cactus, and enclosed by a mud wall or a living fence of cactus cactus, its camouflage is perfect.

In such a rancherías, set well back from the main road and reached only by a straggling dirt track over which the Señor Tío hesitated to risk his expensive car, Julia lived where she had grown up with her sister, Lucía Florencia, the wife of the Señor Tío.

Inside the house there is a ferment of activity like that inside an ant hill. Evening has fallen, and the men are home from the fields. In the darkening patio with its floor of packed earth, crowded with flowering plants bedded out and in

Gender and Nation in the Spanish Modernist Novel Roberta Johnson, 2003 Offering a fresh revisionist analysis of Spanish fiction from 1900 to 1940 this study examines the work of both men and women writers and how they practiced differing forms of modernism As Roberta Johnson notes Spanish male novelists emphasized technical and verbal innovation in representing the contents of an individual consciousness and thus were more modernist in the usual understanding of the term Female writers on the other hand were less aesthetically innovative but engaged in a social modernism that focused on domestic issues gender roles and relations between the sexes Compared to the more conventional even reactionary ways their male counterparts treated such matters Spanish women's fiction in the first half of the twentieth century was often revolutionary The book begins by tracing the history of public discourse on gender from the 1890s through the 1930s a discourse that included the rise of feminism Each chapter then analyzes works by female and male novelists that address key issues related to gender and nationalism the concept of intrahistoria or an essential Spanish soul modernist uses of figures from the Spanish literary tradition notably Don Quixote and Don Juan biological theories of gender prevalent in the 1920s and 1930s and the growth of an organized feminist movement that coincided with the burgeoning Republican movement This is the first book dealing with this period of Spanish literature to consider women novelists such as Maria Martinez Sierra Carmen de Burgos and Concha Espina alongside canonical male novelists including Miguel de Unamuno Ramon del Valle Inclan and Pio Baroja With its contrasting conceptions of modernism Johnson's work provides a compelling new model for bridging the gender divide in the study of Spanish fiction

Short Fiction By Hispanic Writers of the United States Nicol's Kanellos, 1993-01-01 Short Fiction by Hispanic Writers of the United States includes representative works by the most celebrated Cuban American Mexican American and Puerto Rican writers of short fiction in the country The texts cover a full range of expression themes and styles of US Hispanics and are introduced by informative entries which place the authors in their cultural and historic frameworks In these pages the reader will not find picturesque folksy or touristy renditions of Hispanic culture Instead Short Fiction by Hispanic Writers of the United States brings together works that are clear incisive and authentic representations of Hispanic life in the United States The selections are as diverse as Hispanic culture itself and as varied as the personalities of their authors Here are Max Mart nez's outrageous challenge of racial and social structures Roberta Fern ndez's construction of Hispanic women's aesthetics Roberto Fern ndez's subversion of the English language Nicholasa Mohr's humorous attack on patriarchy and Judith Ortiz Cofer's poetic evocation of childhood and biculturalism This collection engages in aesthetic and cultural experience that will result in a re-defined canon and a new identity for the country as whole They are re-focusing our perception of ourselves as a people and a culture The pressure and the commitment to do so of course make for excellence and innovation in literary expression It also makes for enjoyable reading Short Fiction by Hispanic Writers of the United States is recommended for the general fiction reader and for use in high school and college literature classes in search of a
