Proteges Linda Lee Phillips, 1977 Does Choice Matter? Dana Lynn Kendall, 2007 Many organizations currently implement formal mentoring programs to assist newcomers in their adjustment to organizational norms standards and culture However very few empirically established guidelines exist for how to effectively match mentors to protégés in formal programs sponsored by organizations Typically organizations attempt to match mentors to protégés based on similarity of goals interests However prior research suggests that even mentors and protégés disagree with respect to their perceived similarity Consequently it should be difficult for a program administrator to determine which mentors and protégés are likely to be compatible Recent research has found that protégés who perceived they had input into their match reported higher quality relationships The present study extended this research by experimentally manipulating protégé choice and by investigating potential mechanisms through which choice is expected to influence relationship success Mentors were undergraduate juniors and seniors and protégés were first semester freshmen randomly assigned to choose their own mentor or to be matched to a mentor by the program administrator What Protégés and Mentors Report Helped Or

Hindered the Outcomes of Mentoring Relationships Sarah Louise Buydens, 2016 How to best conduct a mentoring relationship has been confounded by the lack of a consistent definition of mentoring and the scarcity of studies addressing how to achieve a positive outcome This study contributes new operationalized definitions of mentoring mentor and protégé and a modified version of the Critical Incident Technique and the Enhanced Critical Incident Technique called the Adapted Critical Incident Technique ACIT which is more consistent with a qualitative methodology The researcher interviewed 18 self-described mentors and protégés to obtain 207 quotes about what critical behaviours helped or hindered mentoring relationship outcomes Independent judges confirmed the placement of quotes into 13 categories of behaviours that helped mentors and proteges to reach the mentoring goals and 10 categories of behaviours that hindered the mentoring outcome. The findings contribute to an increased understanding of the foundation upon which mentors and proteges in all fields may potentially build better programs and training under the guise of mentorship.

Does Self-efficacy Crossover Between Mentors and Proteges Within Mentoring Dyads? :b Examining the Facilitating Role of Perspective Taking in the Crossover Process Levena Varghese, 2017. Extensive research on mentoring shows that mentoring programs within organizational settings enhance various individual outcomes. The current dissertation specifically examined how mentors enhanced protege self efficacy. Three studies were designed to investigate whether efficacy beliefs transfer from mentors to their respective proteges. The studies also focused on the conditions and the psychological processes that facilitated the transfer of efficacious beliefs between the members of the mentoring dyad. Drawing on social comparison theory I proposed that when shared experience exists between mentors and proteges proteges are able to take the perspective of their mentors. I further proposed that the perspective taking a protege engages in enables them to ascribe positive aspects of their mentor i.e. efficacious beliefs to themselves. Precisely a protege's perspective taking bolsters the transfer of efficacious beliefs from the mentor to the protege. Study 1 and Study 2 adopted an experimental design i.e. vignette study and Study 3 adopted a survey design with proteges in an e-mentoring program. Results from all the three studies provided evidence for the transfer of efficacy beliefs from the mentor to the protege. The findings also supported the postulation that shared experience between the protege and the mentor facilitates perspective taking on behalf of the protege. Although the findings of the experimental studies showed that a protege's perspective taking moderated the positive transfer of efficacy beliefs from the mentor to the protege, the field study failed to replicate this finding. The current research's findings have implications for training and developing employees. Mentors are able to encourage proteges to attempt and pursue stretch goals or tackle challenges by instilling domain specific efficacy beliefs in them. The research findings also underscore the role of shared experience and psychological process such as perspective taking in making mentoring relationships efficient and effective.
