* Implications emerge from the study of changes in institutional arrangements that were primary to some regions and the institutional arrangements that were secondary. This regional approach is particularly relevant for the institutional arrangements in different parts of the economy. The emerging effect only emerges in a broader context. Thus, the institutional arrangements in different parts of the economy, as well as the institutional arrangements in the economy, are not the same. The study is a contribution to the study of the institutional arrangements in the economy.

Chlorophyll fluorescence, photosynthesis and leaf temperature were measured in the leaves of the plants. The results showed that the plants exposed to the high temperature treatment had a significant increase in chlorophyll fluorescence and a significant decrease in photosynthesis and leaf temperature. The results also showed that the plants exposed to the high temperature treatment had a significant increase in the number of stomata and a significant decrease in the number of guard cells.
