Reading Families:

Reading Families Catherine Compton-Lilly, 2003 This dynamic text offers a rare glimpse into the literacy development of urban children and their families role in it Based on the author s candid interviews with her first grade students their parents and grandparents this book challenges the stereotypical view that urban parents don t care about their children s education By listening closely to the voices of her students and their families the author helps us to move beyond negative assumptions revealing complexities that have previously been undocumented

Reading Families Rebecca L. Krug, 2018-09-05

Rebecca Krug argues that in the later Middle Ages people defined themselves in terms of family relationships but increasingly saw their social circumstances as being connected to the written word Complex family dynamics and social configurations motivated women to engage in text based activities Although not all or even the majority of women could read and write it became natural for women to think of writing as a part of everyday life Reading Families looks at the literate practice of two individual women Margaret Paston and Margaret Beaufort and of two communities in which women were central the Norwich Lollards and the Bridgettines at Syon Abbey The book begins with Paston s letters which were written at her husband s request and ends with devotional texts that describe the spiritual daughterhood of the Bridgettine readers Scholars often assume that medieval women s participation in literate culture constituted a rejection of patriarchal authority Krug maintains however that for most women learning to engage with the written word served as a practical response to social changes and was not necessarily a revolutionary act
