

Quick Guide to Recording

The following section is a step-by-step guide to how I get acoustic guitar sounds for strumming, fingerpicking, and direct recording. One of the quickest ways to learn is to start with someone else's ideas and expand upon their information. So, if you like my sounds, feel free to use my techniques and tweak them to your ear's content.

Because sound quality is basically a matter of opinion, I want you to be able to create your own unique sounds. For this reason, Chapters 1–6 describe in great detail other recording options designed to steer you toward achieving a great acoustic guitar sound. Consider those chapters to be your reference section in case you don't thoroughly understand any of the general steps or you wish to take those general steps a bit further. Happy recording...

Strumming Guitar Parts

Step 1: Find a quiet place to record—isolated from outside noise. For this example, I'm using a condenser microphone, which is very sensitive to loud and soft sounds. For this reason, you need to find a place that doesn't have any unwanted sounds leaking into your recording environment.

Step 2: Get the guitar into a fixed position. This is usually achieved by sitting down and holding fairly still. Try to avoid extraneous movement as much as possible. Make sure that you are in tune, and if possible, have newer strings on your guitar. Remember that newer strings are more stable for tuning and have better sustain. I've also found that heavier gauge strings (I'm using .012-gauge Dean Markley strings) have a fuller, richer quality.

know... you won't until you complete a few more steps, so you may need to change
the mic position later.
