Rethinking Family School Relations A Critique Of Parental Involvement In:

Rethinking Family-school Relations Maria Eulina P. de Carvalho, 2000 This book addresses the complications and implications of parental involvement as a policy through an exploratory theoretical approach including historical and sociological accounts and personal reflection This approach represents the author's effort to understand the origins meanings and effects of parental involvement as a prerequisite of schooling and particularly as a policy solution for low achievement and even inequity in the American educational system Most of the policy and research discourse on school family relations exalts the partnership ideal taking for granted its desirability and viability the perspective of parents on specific involvement in instruction and the conditions of diverse families in fulfilling their appointed role in the partnership De Carvalho takes a distinct stance She argues that the partnership parental ideal neglects several major factors It proclaims parental involvement as a means to enhance and perhaps equalize school outcomes but disregards how family material and cultural conditions and feelings about schooling differ according to social class thus the partnership parental involvement ideal is more likely to be a projection of the model of upper middle class suburban community schooling than an open invitation for diverse families to recreate schooling Although it appeals to the image of the traditional community school the pressure for more family educational accountability really overlooks history as well as present social conditions Finally family school relations are relations of power but most families are powerless De Carvalho makes the case that two linked effects of this policy are the gravest the imposition of a particular parenting style and intrusion into family life and the escalation of educational inequality Rethinking Family School Relations A Critique of Parental Involvement in Schooling a carefully researched and persuasively argued work is essential reading for all school professionals parents and individuals concerned with public schooling and educational equality

Rethinking Family-school Relations Maria Eulina P. De Carvalho, 2001 This book addresses the complications and implications of parental involvement as a policy through an exploratory theoretical approach including historical and sociological accounts and personal reflection This approach represents the author's effort to understand the origins meanings and effects of parental involvement as a prerequisite of schooling and particularly as a policy solution for low achievement and even inequity in the American educational system Most of the policy and research discourse on school family relations exalts the partnership ideal taking for granted its desirability and viability the perspective of parents on specific involvement in instruction and the conditions of diverse families in fulfilling their appointed role in the partnership De Carvalho takes a distinct stance She argues that the partnership parental ideal neglects several major factors It proclaims parental involvement as a means to enhance and perhaps equalize school outcomes but disregards how family material and cultural conditions and feelings about schooling differ according to social class thus the partnership parental involvement ideal is more likely to be a projection of the model of upper middle class suburban community schooling than an open invitation for diverse families to recreate schooling Although it appeals to the image of the traditional community school the pressure for more family educational accountability really overlooks history as well as present social conditions Finally family school relations are relations of power but most families are powerless De Carvalho makes the case that two linked effects of this policy are the gravest the imposition of a particular parenting style and intrusion into family life and the escalation of educational inequality Rethinking Family School Relations A Critique of Parental Involvement in Schooling a carefully researched and persuasively argued work is essential reading for all school professionals parents and individuals concerned with public schooling and educational equality Rethinking Family-school Relations Maria Eulina de Carvalho, 2000-10 This book addresses the complications and implications of parental involvement as a policy through an exploratory theoretical approach including historical and sociological accounts and personal reflection This approach represents the author's effort to understand the origins meanings and effects of parental involvement as a prerequisite of schooling and particularly as a policy solution for low achievement and even inequity in the American educational system Most of the policy and research discourse on school family relations exalts the partnership ideal taking for granted its desirability and viability the perspective of parents on specific involvement in instruction and the conditions of diverse families in fulfilling their appointed role in the partnership De Carvalho takes a distinct stance She argues that the partnership parental ideal neglects several major factors It proclaims parental involvement as a means to enhance and perhaps equalize school outcomes but disregards how family material and cultural conditions and feelings about schooling differ according to social class thus the partnership parental involvement ideal is more likely to be a projection of the model of upper middle class suburban community schooling than an open invitation for diverse families to recreate schooling Although it appeals to the image of the traditional community school the pressure for more family educational accountability really overlooks history as well as present social conditions Finally family school relations are relations of power but most families are powerless De Carvalho makes the case that two linked effects of this policy are the gravest the imposition of a particular parenting style and intrusion into family life and the escalation of educational inequality Rethinking Family School Relations A Critique of Parental Involvement in Schooling a carefully researched and persuasively argued work is essential reading for all school professionals parents and individuals concerned with public schooling and educational equality

Improving Urban Schools: Leadership And Collaboration Ainscow, Mel, West, Mel, 2006-03-01 Drawing on research evidence Improving Urban Schools addresses the question of how primary and secondary urban schools can be improved in a more inclusive way The authors argue that urban schools and their communities have within them expertise that tends to be overlooked and latent creativity that should be mobilised to move thinking and progress forward They show that new approaches to leadership various forms of collaborative school to school partnerships and major changes in national policy development are needed to make use of this untapped energy Learning Beyond Cognition Niels Kryger, Birte Ravn, 2007-06-11 Learning beyond Cognition goes beyond a merely cognitive understanding of learning The concept denotes the ideological and mental formation of the individual as well as the individual's own shaping of an identity Learning beyond Cognition expands on the notion of Building and the current debate about citizenship education The book outlines contemporary educational policies and practices in Europe and other Western countries The authors analyse dominating discourses and learning practices to identify their social and cultural grounding and potentials The authors are experienced international scholars This book is aimed to become an essential resource for researchers teachers students and policy makers who address the current challenges to learning Unsettling Choice Ujju Aggarwal, 2024-03-05 How the Great Recession revealed a system of school choice built on crisis precarity and exclusion What do universal rights to public goods like education mean when codified as individual private choices Is the problem of school choice actually not about better choices for all but rather about the competition and exclusion that choice engenders guaranteeing a system of winners and losers Unsettling Choice addresses such questions through a compelling ethnography that illuminates how one path of neoliberal restructuring in the United States emerged in tandem with and in response to the Civil Rights movement Drawing on ethnographic research in one New York City school district Unsettling Choice traces the contestations that surfaced when in the wake of the 2007 2009 Great Recession public schools navigated austerity by expanding choice based programs Ujju Aggarwal argues that this strategy positioned as saving public schools mobilized mechanisms rooted in market logics to recruit families with economic capital on their side thereby solidifying a public sphere that increasingly resembled the private where contingency was anticipated and rights for some were marked by intensified precarity for poor and working class Black and Latinx families As Unsettling Choice shows these struggles over public schools one of the last remaining universal public goods in the United States were entrapped within neoliberal regimes that exceeded privatization and ensured exclusion even as they were couched in language of equity diversity care and rights And yet this richly detailed and engaging book also tracks an architecture of expansive rights care and belonging built among poor and working class parents at a Head Start center whose critique of choice helps us understand how we might struggle for and reimagine justice and a public that remains to be won Retail e book files for this title are screen reader friendly with images accompanied by short alt text and or extended descriptions
