

A photograph of an elderly couple standing in front of a historic stone building in Barcelona. The woman, on the left, has blonde hair and is wearing a blue patterned shirt. The man, on the right, has white hair and is wearing a white shirt with a red shawl draped over his shoulders. Both are looking upwards with expressions of awe and joy. The background shows the intricate architecture of the building, including arched windows and stone masonry.

Social Security and Retirement in Spain Michele Boldrin,Sergi Jimenez-Martin,Franco Peracchi,1997 We describe the historical evolution of the Spanish Social Security system and its current organization Our attention concentrates on the main public pension scheme for private employees in the manufacturing and service sector RGSS which covers by far the largest majority of Spanish workers After describing the way in which pension and retirement decisions are regulated by this system we try to compute the incentives to early retirement it provides to different kinds of individuals We show that the Spanish SS legislation generates strong incentives to retire early and that Spanish workers tend to do so In particular our findings support the idea that pensions induced incentives matter for the labor supply behavior of Spanish workers While the Spanish system does not pay a particularly generous average pension relative to GDP per capita its generosity concentrates on providing large minimum pensions to individuals with below average working histories and or low wages At the same time the pension system provides workers earning average or above average salaries and with complete working histories with relatively weak financial gains from not retiring after the age of 60 The combination of these features of the Spanish legislation seems to account well for the observed increase in the percentage of early retirees among Spanish pensioners during the nineties
