Rectal Cancer Surgery Odd Soreide, Jarle Norstein, 1996-12-16
Rectal cancer is a major killer. Most of those dying after curative surgery suffer from recurrent disease in the pelvis. Local recurrence is also the only site of failure in up to 50% of patients. A disturbing fact is that the local recurrence rate shows considerably surgeon-related variances. There is now strong evidence that optimizing surgical technique by adopting the principle of total mesorectal excision (TME) will reduce local failure rate, increase the use of sphincter-saving operations, and improve functional results. Surgeons applying this surgical principle will consistently achieve similarly low recurrence rates. This book reviews the failure patterns after rectal cancer surgery, discusses the anatomical basis for rectal cancer surgery, documents the method of spread with emphasis on lymph node metastasis, describes conventional and optimal surgery, presents methods of pathological evaluation of the specimen, documents functional results, and discusses organizational factors influencing rectal cancer treatment. The role of adjuvant therapy if surgery is optimized is critically reviewed. In the final chapter, an international documentation system is presented.

Colorectal Cancer Jim Khan, 2014-03-12
Colorectal cancer is one of the commonest cancers affecting individuals across the world. An improvement in survival has been attributed to multidisciplinary management, better diagnostics, improved surgical options for the primary and metastatic disease, and advances in adjuvant therapy. In this book, international experts share their experience and knowledge on these different aspects in the management of colorectal cancer. An in-depth analysis of screening for colorectal cancer, detailed evaluation of diagnostic modalities in staging colorectal cancer, recent advances in adjuvant therapy, and principles and trends in the surgical management of colorectal cancer is provided. This will certainly prove to be an interesting and informative read for any clinician involved in the management of patients with colorectal cancer.
