

Criticism to German (presumed) mercantilism is not new . Few examples*

- The German stabilisation policies of the late 1940s/early 1950s were criticised by the American economists.
- Also in the 1950s Germany preferred to blame the others: 'inflationary policies' abroad led to the German export upsurge and obliged her to 'sterilise 'imported inflation' by pursuing a fiscal surplus. The surging of the German trade surplus led, after the American and French criticism, to the DM revaluation in 1961
- The case of the 'locomotive theory' is well-known: in the late 1970s chancellor Schmidt reluctantly accepted the idea that Germany had to pull the world economy along the US and Japan. The 2^o oil shock came: he swore that never again Germany would have played the domestic expansion game.
