

Michael remembered he was supposed to be in Sport Magazine in the locker room, so they had to wait. The guy wrote in the article about the office. I guess sort of for an exclusive with the press. I didn't know what I was. He thought I was a relations guy, maybe MJ's personal guy.

Michael had been after me to join him and Adolph on his private jet the morning after we got back to Chicago. I was really torn. He wanted to go to Chicago and play golf for a couple of days and I was to go. He had leased this jet, a comfortable plane, maybe 10. It sounded like fun, sitting there playing being waited on by the stewards.

I just couldn't do it. I was underwriting the team. Norris had a promotional luncheon the next day. I had to leave, not responsibly anyway. I had to take care of the arena.

Jordan's golf clubs were in my trunk so I had a friend Butler, run them down to Brown Field, where MJ was with his plane. He might leave his baggage behind, but the golf clubs.

I caught up with MJ on August 8, when I flew out. He had his limo driver waiting for me at the airport. I thought I had been wearing track shoes. We raced to Michael's house. We headed for Charlotte, N.C., playing cards all the way. The next few days reminded me of that movie Grease where all these people are going coast-to-coast in limos. The difference was that we were going from Chicago to Durham to heaven know where. Just forward.

Michael MJ and Adolph Ricks in the locker room. Michael is the one on the left.
