one of the loveliest evenings that ever fell on the loveliest district in England a fair youth having somewhat the appearance of a page was leaning over the terrace wall on the north side of Windsor Castle and gazing at the magnificent scene before him On his right stretched the broad green expanse forming the Home Park studded with noble trees chiefly consisting of ancient oaks of which England had already learnt to be proud thorns as old or older than the oaks wide spreading beeches tall elms and hollies The disposition of these trees was picturesque and beautiful in the extreme Here at the end of a sweeping vista and in the midst of an open space covered with the greenest sward stood a mighty broad armed oak beneath whose ample boughs though as yet almost destitute of foliage while the sod beneath them could scarcely boast a head of fern couched a herd of deer There lay a thicket of thorns skirting a sand bank burrowed by rabbits on this hand grew a dense and Druid like grove into whose intricacies the slanting sunbeams pierced on that extended a long glade formed by a natural avenue of oaks across which at intervals deer were passing Nor were human figures wanting to give life and interest to the scene Adown the glade came two keepers of the forest having each a couple of buckhounds with them in leash whose baying sounded cheerily amid the woods Nearer the castle and bending their way towards it marched a party of falconers with their well trained birds whose skill they had been approving upon their fists their jesses ringing as they moved along while nearer still and almost at the foot of the terrace wall was a minstrel playing on a rebec to which a keeper in a dress of Lincoln green with a bow over his shoulder a quiver of arrows at his back and a comely damsel under his arm was listening On the left a view altogether different in character though scarcely less beautiful was offered to the gaze It was formed by the town of Windsor then not a third of its present size but incomparably more picturesque in appearance consisting almost entirely of a long straggling row of houses chequered black and white with tall gables and projecting storeys skirting the west and south sides of the castle by the silver windings of the river traceable for miles and reflecting the glowing hues of the sky by the venerable College of Eton embowered in a grove of trees and by a vast tract of well wooded and well cultivated country beyond it interspersed with villages churches old halls monasteries and abbeys
