Gallego,Aritz Irurtzun,2020-12-24 The study of language has changed substantially in the last decades In particular the development of new technologies has allowed the emergence of new experimental techniques which complement more traditional approaches to data in linguistics like informal reports of native speakers judgments surveys corpus studies or fieldwork This move is an enriching feature of contemporary linguistics allowing for a better understanding of a phenomenon as complex as natural language where all sorts of factors internal and external to the individual interact Chomsky 2005 This has generated some sort of divergence not only in research approaches but also in the phenomena studied with an increasing specialization between subfields and accounts At the same time it has also led to subfield isolation and methodological a priori with some researchers even claiming that theoretical linguistics has little to offer to cognitive science see for instance Edelman Phillips den Dikken Bernstein Tortora Sprouse Sch tze Phillips 2013 Housing, health, and happiness Rocio Titiunik,2007 Despite the importance of housing for people s well being there has been little work done to assess the causal impact of housing and housing improvement programs on health and welfare In this paper the authors help fill this gap by investigating the impact of a large scale effort by the Mexican government to replace dirt floors with cement floors on child health and adult happiness They find that replacing dirt floors with cement floors significantly reduces parasitic infestations in young children reduces diarrhea reduces anemia and improves cognitive development Finally they also find that this program leave adults substantially better off as measured by satisfaction with their housing and quality of life and by their significantly lower rates of depression and perceived stress
