

Workonomics: Making the Economy Work

Madhu Prabakaran

November 22, 2022

Work is what we do towards nurturing our Karmic Teleological Choices. Calibrating with that of institutions makes the work-space grandeur. Work space is a space in which we nurture each other towards the work in mutual progress. It is a co-creative juncture for traversal destinations for individuals and institutions. Diminishing space into a sweatshop of toil spoils its ambience and progress as well. That thins down the spirit of work. Nurturing work is an institutional contribution to humanity making itself better by its labour. Using the workspace as a member of work order is the responsibility of the working individual. I wonder why management thinkers have yet not come to this understanding. This could be the utopian project of economic thought. It was there, however, in the making of economics as a feeder science for investors prioritizing extractive profit from labour and nature in an artificially straightened temporality of accumulation upwards, the vision is lost. Colonial and its continuation as geo-exploitative economics, reduced economics into a class-war from above: a neo-racism by the claims of formal economic order, a de-historicized pseudo-science of formalism, that displaced its authentic concern of a fair economics for the shared world. A sound economy shall prioritize work over profit, because work itself is the profit. Finance, marketing, operation and security are the vehicles that ensure good work.
