

he believes that India has her specific characteristics too and an Indian writer, when guided by his spontaneous inspiration, is bound to breathe the Indian spirit into his writing." (1993: 96) Further, P. Raja says that, "Manoj is an adherer of T.S. Eliot's theory on Tradition and Individual Talent". According to him the meeting point of these two elements is as subtle and submerged as the meeting point of the horizon at the sunset's blue with the sky's, he says in the same interview cited above, "when an Indian writer is naturally Indian, his Indianism is hardly pronounced, but what becomes conspicuously pronounced is when an Indian writer makes a conscious effort to highlight his Indianism or does the opposite- tries to consciously cultivate a stance that should appear drastically different from the traditional writing" (Raja, 1993: 96). One can easily mark with minute observation that here satirically Manoj Das has disclosed the clash between two extreme classes (people with traditional values and the people with changing values) of societal psychology. The story of 'Mystery of the Missing Cap' may be cited as an instance in this particular case. In his world of literature we can find many works like the world which is made of Indian sensibility, Indian Psychology, Transcendentalism or transcendental attitude, humanism, humanism philosophy, death secret and the Hindu and universal culture of death, different psychological attitudes, child psychology, women psychology, male psychology, psychology of different socio-economic, political and socio-psychological classes. He has touched nearly every of human life. And like Fakir Mohan Senapati he has not left the culture of Indian anywhere. And it is one of the spectators of Das that he is the worthy descendant of Bengali sat two things mainly and those are: deal with real and real life forms of Odisha and use of mild humour in it. However, it has given him a special distinction in the firmament of Indian and Asian literature.

4. Conclusion

On the basis of the discussions above and analysis of texts and contents of his literature at personal level, it may fairly be concluded that the literature of the literature of Sri Das is not at all different from the literary means of philosophy. His encounter with the philosophers, the East and the West. Especially, he has gradually been influenced by the philosophical doctrines of Sri Aurobindo. The writer has tried to establish the representational philosophy in the head, heart and spirit of the reader as well as in the entire society. Sometimes it looks surreal but in fact it is much real than common reality. Another major aspect of his literary approach is the psychological dimension which covers the psychology of the involved character as well as of the readers. In short, he knows the science and art of tracking understanding and arranging the psychology of the direct characters (readers) and indirect characters. Another thing with regard to his phenomenon is his ability to connect and bridge the readers' mind magically with his literary style and approach. In his world of fiction and short story he is quite conscious about different types of psychologies, i.e. Child Psychology [Shishu Bhasanaka Chitra] [The Last Letter of Spring], Woman Psychology [Aksoushara Bhasan] [Sign of Sky], Male Psychology [Aksoushara Bhasan] [Sign of Sky], Bhakta Gaudya and the Tiger, Shesha Paasrikara Sasathasara [In Search of the Last Taster], Societal Psychology [Laxmire Akhara] [Adventure of Laxmi], Anika Bhasana [Many Smiles], Bhousara Eka Bharya [A Farewell to the Lady Ghost], Shyambhaskara [Tiger-Kidnapping], Transcendental Psychology [The Submerged Valley, Ananta Phala] [The Divine Fruit], Akshara Bhasan [Sign of Sky], Laxmire Akhara [Laxmi's Adventure] and many other types of Psychologies. Sometimes he has shown the social psychology in his writing but in fact it could be said that these are the personal cognition corner of the writer himself. However, from the above discussions we may even draw a conclusion that the literature of Professor Sri Manoj Das has created a triangular aspendant between Literature, Philosophy and Psychology and this is almost his unique capacity which makes him out generic from among the other contemporary writers. His consciousness about history, psychology and philosophy makes his literature more special.
