Mesothelioma is a type of cancer in which tumors form in the tissue that lines the lungs heart stomach and other organs While mesothelioma is relatively rare it represents a serious health crisis as the disease is aggressive and often fatal This book includes five chapters that detail the treatment and prognosis of the disease as well as the factors that put a person at risk for developing mesothelioma Chapter One describes the most promising emerging immunotherapy combinations for the treatment of malignant pleural mesothelioma discussing the biological rational underlying their development as well as the issues surrounding their clinical development Chapter Two provides an overview of malignant mesothelioma describing the history of its diagnosis and treatment as well as the role that asbestos exposure and other factors play in its development Chapter Three revises the role of the main inflammatory and immunological markers as prognostic indicators in malignant pleural mesothelioma and discusses the surgical effects on immune response against cancer Chapter Four explores the main cancer markers utilized for mesothelioma diagnosis as well as the new developments in the field Lastly Chapter Five examines the various surgical options available for removing pleural tumors Mesotheliomas of Animals Edward B. Ilgren, 1993-08-09

Mesotheliomas of Animals is the first book to provide a comprehensive compilation of the diverse and often disparate literature regarding animal mesotheliomas The compendium presents evidence to support the existence of background and threshold both of which are concepts central to the controversy surrounding nonasbestos related mesotheliomas Examples of background tumors those which are nonasbestos related are described in detail and indications of threshold for the induction of mesotheliomas following exposure to asbestiform and nonasbestiform agents are evident from the positive dose response studies that are discussed This compendium also allows for easy comparison of tumor yields elicited in inoculation studies performed with the same fiber types at similar doses These comparisons often demonstrate markedly different tumor yields and highlight the limitations of injection techniques for fiber safety assessment

Mesotheliomas of Animals will be an essential reference for industrial hygienists environmental lawyers cancer researchers and pulmonary scientists It will be particularly useful to anyone involved with the design of fiber safety tests or with developing experimental models and protocols to assess the manner in which mesotheliomagenesis occurs
