Man And A Woman A 20 Years Later:

Impersonal Enunciation, or the Place of Film Christian Metz, 2016-02-02 Christian Metz is best known for applying Saussurean theories of semiology to film analysis In the 1970s he used Sigmund Freud's psychology and Jacques Lacan's mirror theory to explain the popularity of cinema In this final book Metz uses the concept of enunciation to articulate how films speak and explore where this communication occurs offering critical direction for theorists who struggle with the phenomena of new media If a film frame contains another frame which frame do we emphasize And should we consider this staging an impersonal act of enunciation Consulting a range of genres and national trends Metz builds a novel theory around the placement and subjectivity of screens within screens which pulls in and forces him to reassess his work on authorship film language and the position of the spectator Metz again takes up the linguistic and theoretical work of Benveniste Genette Casetti and Bordwell drawing surprising conclusions that presage current writings on digital media Metz's analysis enriches work on cybernetic emergence self assembly self reference hypertext and texts that self produce in such a way that the human element disappears A critical introduction by Cormac Deane bolsters the connection between Metz's findings and nascent digital media theory emphasizing Metz's keen awareness of the methodological and philosophical concerns we wrestle with today
