Lyndon Hickman,2011-07-01 It was when mankind discovered how to make electricity that the world as we knew it changed profoundly Soon generated electricity lit our streets and homes provided heat brought us efficient communication modern transportation and the effort of electro motive force Yet manmade electricity carried through the wires and cables with which we fenced the land the power lines encircling our towns and our cities had another consequence Generated electricity banished things of folklore and legend Witches werewolves demons whose evil spirits had roamed the earth throughout time were displaced driven off by the pain of electricity Unfortunately also displaced were the good those angels which had appeared to guide mankind throughout history Then one day in our not too distant past a brilliant scientist created a machine that brought manmade electricity to a halt That day marked the beginning of the return of the evil as well as the good in a time that became known as the years of magic
