Gestion 2000. Management interculturel en Inde Nathalie Bernoud-Belhoste, 2010. Dans le contexte de travail indien, l'hypermobilité globale de la main-d'œuvre qualifiée parlant anglais est source de préoccupation pour les entreprises gérées par des expatriés français. La construction de la cohésion et de la collaboration au sein de ces entreprises, créations locales, petites et moyennes entreprises ou multinationales, est un des enjeux majeurs. La gestion des entreprises étrangères souvent analysée à travers de théories du management interculturel met en exergue l'importance des cultures nationales sur l'influence du comportement des acteurs. Ce travail montre que les justifications narratives des acteurs se basent de façon variable sur ce concept. Les individus gèrent la différence selon trois processus de distinction, de différenciation ou de distanciation, dans lequel la culture nationale est plus ou moins au centre des justifications. Cette représentation personnelle de la différence de la part des expatriés qui dirigent ces entreprises a un impact sur l'organisation et notamment sur la fonction des ressources humaines cruciales dans ce contexte professionnel particulier. Plus la culture nationale sera présente dans les justifications, moins la construction cohésion sera forte dans ces entités. L'implication personnelle de l'expatrié dans l'entreprise localement ainsi que sa capacité créer un projet d'entreprise unique est un des facteurs clés de succès permettant de répondre aux défis de cette conjoncture
