

philosophies that Candide has, demonstrates the love for the world on his part. This depicts how little he embraced God's role or essence in his life and his defectively relationship with Him.

Candide's rejection of God's in his life is further evident when after being thrown out of Baron's house and caught kissing Baron's daughter, encountered a protestant minister (Wooton & Voltaire 7). When asked of the matter of the pope being an antichrist, he retaliated with utter disinterested in regards to religion. He also acknowledges that the world has everything that he needs, hence confirming his disregard for God's provision in terms of not only material but also protection (Wooton & Voltaire 7). This is after a man regarded as an Anabaptist salvaged him from the streets and fed him.

All the transitions and security risks that Candides passed through up to the time he met again with the Baron's daughter Cunegonde did not influence him depict any acknowledge of God's will in his life either. He only followed the usual teachings of his tutor Panglos that every action has a probable cause. This is so much in disregarding of the protection that God offers by using other people. He also could not understand the reasons as to why an old woman who barely knew him just took care of him when he was injured (Wooton & Voltaire 14).

Candide's entire account even when he was traversing towns search for his love Cunegonde and running from the authorities did not portray any acceptance of God's role in his life. This is not even when told how a Jesuit Priest managed to save Cunegonde's brother. Baron's life could influence his thinking to incline into having second thought of God (Wooton & Voltaire 31). The killings, which Candide was involved in, further portray him as a person with disregard to humanity, which is God's cardinal God's rule of minding one's fellow being.
